CALL FOR PAPERS

How is what we call “Asia” seen, heard, or experienced? A diverse range of interactions and sensorial realities shape the lived experiences of people across the region. How do day-to-day encounters within Asia contribute to complex and overlapping notions of identity, community, or visions for the future? On the other side of the coin, how do we experience Asia as researchers? What individual affective reactions, including responses to art, spaces, storytelling, current events, or climate challenges, produce our ideas about Asia and the countries and cultures that comprise it? This conference seeks to ground its discussion of Asia in the lived, human experiences that give rise to the ideas we share. We welcome submissions from any disciplinary or interdisciplinary background, and look forward to hearing more about your research.
